My facilitation approach

KPMG understands the benefit of an integrated approach for the development of the ILM as part of the Business Case development process. I will work with you as part of the planning process to determine how many workshops are required and how they can best be timed within the context of the broader project to maximise the benefit to the project as a whole.

I take a practical and collaborative approach to facilitation, particularly the ILM workshops, which are entirely focused on delivering the best outcome for my client. My method is designed to ensure robust discussion and consideration of the problems and the benefits informs the ultimate approach, and the opportunity for engagement with senior external stakeholders to ensure buy-in throughout the project as it develops.

In an ILM session, I work to build consensus amongst the decision makers in the room, so that the opportunity of undertaking the ILM exercise is useful and aligned to your strategic interests. Workshop notes are captured and shared with the project team to support the business case development process and the ILM is socialised with workshop participants for feedback and refinement.

Feedback from my clients has included:

"Tighe's experience was very useful in developing a meaningful ILM for investment in [our] capability and operational resources to deliver regional economic services and outcomes."

Indicative pricing

Indicative costs for each workshop are $2,500 (incl. GST) per workshop, including the required time for preparation and production of outputs and documentation.

The time and cost may vary depending on the level of existing information or workshops held, the size and nature of the investment, and location of the workshops. Although I am based in Melbourne, I am available to travel within Australia and New Zealand at cost.
